

PHILIPPINES AT WORLD'S FAIR

Complete Exhibition of Island People and Industries Covers Forty-seven Acres and is Independent of Larger Show.

Not even in the heart of Manila city could there be found forty-seven acres of Philippine territory as interesting as that amount of space covered by the islands' display at the World's Fair. Here is an exposition within an exposition, a little world that revolves independently of the larger one encompassing it.

Scores of buildings are filled with exhibits, native life is depicted by as many different villages as there are tribes on the islands, military drills are given by Philippine troops, and concerts are rendered by native bands. For its amusement features the Philippine exposition has the humorous Igor-note, who dine on dog meat, and visitors are entertained by Visayan actors and actresses. Nothing is lacking to make the show complete.

The Administration building is a replica of the government offices in Manila, while the Art and Education building reproduces in miniature the cathedral in the walled city, even the mellowed tints of age being faithfully rendered. A section of the ancient but still serviceable town wall has been reconstructed to serve the double purpose of a gateway to the show and a museum of arms and war relics. The other main edifices are types of Filipino homes, being built of unadorned timber, bamboo and rattan, with thatched roofs and broad verandas.

Then there are the tribal villages nestling under the trees, some of the houses perched high up among the boughs, others on piles above the waters of the Arrowhead lake, all of them actual dwellings fashioned of native materials by the workmanship and illustrating the manners, customs and pursuits of their occupants. Here are women wearing a coarse cloth on a rude hand loom, others making baskets, others tending irrigated fields of rice. One group of men are in village council, trying an offender according to their tribal laws, others are slowly moving in a circular dance to the thump of tom-toms and the clang of brass gongs; others, again, are smelting iron by the aid of a primitive but most ingenious bellows, the constituent parts of which are a bamboo tube and an airtight stop of feathers working therein like the piston of a syringe. And these are but a few of an almost endless variety of life pictures.

The ethnological problem is a somewhat complicated one; but, although there are no fewer than sixteen races represented among the village dwellers, the scouts and the constabulary, each race speaking its own dialect and following its own customs, all may be roughly classified into four groups—the true aborigines or non-Malays, the pagan Malays, the Christian Malays and the Mohammedan Malays.

The first are the dwarf Negritos, with dark skins and woolly heads, wearers of scanty raiment, proficient in the use of the bow and poisoned arrow, a race of nomads and forest dwellers, pagans pure and simple. They live in their own stockaded village.

Next to them are the Igorrotes, whose origin is traced back to the first wave of Malay invasion. Again, we have scanty clothing, amounting almost to nudity, but copper colored skins, long wavy tresses, pleasant featured faces and fine physiques, even though the stature be small. Among these pagan Malays are the head hunters and the dog eaters. They are savages, yet have their code of laws and a knowledge of several primitive industries.

The Christian Malays, produced by the second wave of invasion, are represented by the Visayans, tall and handsome race, dressed well, living in pretty homes, skilled in weaving, dyeing, basket making, hat making, wood carving and other handicrafts, musicians of no mean merit, the one group of natives who came early and thoroughly under the influence of the early Spanish settlers.

Dragging Pains

2825 Keeley St., Chicago, Ill., Oct. 2, 1902.
I suffered with falling and congestion of the womb, with severe pains through the groin. I suffered for a long time with these pains, had blinding headaches and rushing of blood to the brain. When I was for it seemed that I had tried all and failed, but I had never tried Wine of Cardui. I bought a bottle for my sick woman. I found it pleasant to take and soon knew that I had the right medicine. Now I seemed to course through my veins and after using eleven bottles I was a well woman.

Mrs. Bush

Mrs. Bush is now in perfect health because she took Wine of Cardui for menstrual disorders, bearing down pains and blinding headaches when all other remedies failed to bring her relief. Any sufferer may secure health by taking Wine of Cardui in her home. The first bottle convinces the patient she is on the road to health.

lowa, ever at war among themselves and with the whole outside world. Despite their ferocity, they are a clever race, dress handsomely, have their soldiers and their slaves and are expert seamen, while long continued pillage on the high seas has surrounded them with many of the luxuries and conveniences of western civilization.

The buildings of Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries show all the varied natural products, also the elementary primitive processes as yet in vogue, while in the Women's building we are introduced to a number of native industries, including the beautiful fabrics from the just, banana and pineapple fibers. This information is collated in the Building of Commerce, where a unique and most effective method of exhibiting is followed. In one hall are samples of all the articles produced for export, among which Manila fiber, of course, holds the chief place of prominence, while in a second hall are all the manufactures from every country that are imported and find a ready market among the populace. Thus the business man gets a comprehensive view of the Philippines has been brought over to visit the Exposition and study American business methods and manufactures. It will be recognized that great benefit both to the islands and to the world at large must result from this work of mutual enlightenment.

TOM TAGGART'S WAY.

Anecdotes About the Democratic National Chairman.

HOW HE SOON SOLVED A PUZZLE.

A Sample of His Cleverness at Sight of Head Work—One of His Political Parades—Solves His Kidnaper as an Old Irishwoman—Result of Contact With a Drunken Man.

Everybody in Indianapolis has a story to tell about Tom Taggart since his elevation to the Democratic national committee chairmanship, says the New York Tribune.

When Taggart was in St. Louis attending the national convention he made his headquarters at the Jefferson hotel. The passenger elevators were jammed at almost all hours of the day and night. On one occasion it was necessary that he should do some work in one of his rooms on the sixth floor and with the scores of persons fighting to get into the elevators the prospect of getting upstairs without walking was not good. Taggart soon solved the puzzle.

"Come on with me to the freight elevator," he said to Albert F. Zeitzing, his secretary.

"Can't let you in here," said the freight elevator conductor. "You must go to the passenger elevator."

"Well," said Taggart, "I am the new steward, and this is the new elevator." "Is the butcher," now move up."

The conductor "moved."

Taggart is an adept at slight of hand and he took advantage of a great prestidigitator if he had turned his attention in that direction. But he derotes his talents as a "con artist" in depriving the friends of their ties, watches and the like and returning the articles after the victims have been kept in hot water long enough to satisfy his acid humor.

One day Andrew M. Sweeney, president of the Indianapolis school board, and a close friend of Taggart, was dining with a few home with Taggart and several other acquaintances at the Grand hotel. While they were talking Taggart made a move as if to brush Sweeney's coat, and in the operation extracted his diamond pin. It was a dull afternoon, and after awhile Taggart suggested to half a dozen of his friends, including Sweeney, that they take a trip out to Fairview park, a summer resort on an electric line about four miles out of the city. They boarded a trolley car and in due time reached the park. Taggart then suggested that they walk over to a leafy book on the further side of the grounds.

Arriving there, Taggart assembled the crowd close around him, and in a grave manner began to address the astonished Mr. Sweeney.

"Mr. Sweeney," he said, "we have long been your friends, and you have been so kind to us and have assisted each and all of us in so many ways that we feel under deep obligations to you. We have therefore chosen this occasion and adopted this method of notifying our deep gratitude toward you. I am commissioned, Mr. Sweeney, by these gentlemen whom you see about you to make you a slight present as a testimonial of our regard. What I am about to present to you is not worth much in dollars and cents, but we desire that you shall value it by the spirit in which it is offered, rather than by the value of the gift."

By this time there was moisture in the eyes of Mr. Sweeney.

"I now present to you our gift," said Taggart, bowing and handing to him his such occasion there was a faint bearing a big hollow sycamore log, with knot holes in it and Democrats sticking their heads out of every knot hole. There was a sign on the log which read, "The Woods Are Full of Democrats."

Joe Heilly, secretary of the Democratic state committee, said the other day:

Way back in 1877, when Taggart was working for a railroad restaurant in Garrett, Ind., he received orders to come to Indianapolis and work in a restaurant then located at the Union station. An old Irishwoman, a cook in the Garrett establishment, was to come to Indianapolis and work in a restaurant then located at the Union station. An old Irishwoman, a cook in the Garrett establishment, was to come to Indianapolis and work in a restaurant then located at the Union station.

When they entered the restaurant at Indianapolis, Taggart was in his shirt sleeves, and the old woman came behind, wearing his coat. That was his first introduction to Indianapolis.

They worked in the restaurant together for several years. Then Taggart opened a place of his own and later went into the hotel business. Then he came out for office.

One day when he was out electioneering the old woman called him into the restaurant where she was working and said to him: "Tom, I'll never forget the night you made me wear your coat. Now you are running for office and will need a little money. Here, take this, it's all I have, but you're welcome to it." And before Taggart knew what the old woman was doing she had placed a big roll of bills in his hand. He had to argue with her a long time before convincing her that he did not need the money and would not accept it.

Taggart has always been fond of helping drink victims to get started in the straight and narrow path. One day a certain Irishman who had been respectable in his former days entered the mayor's office.

"I am sick and out of work," he began.

"Yes, and you're drunk," interrupted Taggart.

"If you will give me $3 to buy a pair of shoes I'll never drink another drop in my life," pleaded the unfortunate wretch.

"I'll tell you what I'll do," said Taggart. "I'll send out and get the shoes for you. If I give you the money you would go and get more whiskey, I'll give you the shoes on condition that if you get drunk you are to bring them back to me."

Taggart saw more of Pat for two months. Finally he showed up at the office, drunk as a lord. Under his arm was a package carefully wrapped in a newspaper. He unfolded the newspaper slowly and laid at the wretched mayor's feet the pair of shoes.

"I told you that I would bring them back, and I did," was all that Pat said.

A health note says that the hands should always be washed after handling money. If the lure is so dithy as that it should be handled with tongs.

One campaign orator caught fire while delivering a speech. This exemplifies one more of the dangers of turning eloquence.
