Farming as a Makeshift.

Australia has persistently turned down various schemes for developing her territory with the aid of assisted immigrants. Her objection seems to be based on the action that the upshot of such a movement by philanthropists would be to turn loose upon her a horde of paupers. Canada, however, has decided to welcome 250 families of the unemployed which a generous banker will send out from England at his own expense.

People who have the misfortune to be unemployed and who are willing to be assisted to new homes are not necessarily paupers in the usual sense of the word. But there is prospect of their becoming helpless if transplanted from native environment to conditions for which they are in every way unsuited by habit and training. An incompetent person in the country is in a most hopeless and distressing situation. Men who can turn their hands to farm work and who will take all the rough knocks of the land toiler's life can thrive in Australia or Canada or anywhere else. Factory hands and those of desultory employments do not break into the agricultural harness readily or if they do will not stick to the plow long enough to make the effort worth while. Now and then a town bred immigrant who has the energy to strike out for himself succeeds as a tiller of the soil, but the chances are heavily against a man who is assisted to the land simply because he cannot get along where nature planted him.

The Circus to "Come to Town" Again If the railway rate reform bill suspended upon ballots cast by the young folks of the country, all the way from the spooning, peanut and gingerbread age down to kids in short clothes, it would go under at the first round. Cause why, the circus. Halfway transportation rates for circuses have vaulted so high the showmen stand it and will return to wagons, with exhibitions at all the towns on the route instead of the widely scattered cities.

This going back to horse power for circus transportation means, of course, that the circus of the future, like the circus of our saddles, will really "come to town" from the open country past "our houses" or past the house of our cousins on the other road, and we can see the whole mysterious congeries un-loaded and set up and afterward torn down and loaded up. And we can spend the money that has been going into railway fares to visit city shows in peanuts, lemonade and gingerbread right at home. Once more childhood's event of the year will open with the spectacle of trees and fences for miles out on the road occupied by expectant boys and girls, barefooted and freckled, and the day after there will be smart and aches of scratches and stone bruises mingled with fading visions of the clown, the dancing horses and the "Wild Man of Borrieo." So railroad rates may soar and stay soared if thereby the traveling circus is brought back to primitive ways of getting in and out of town.

Advertising pays if done right. THE REVIEW is the right medium.
