Carl Schurz.

President Lincoln introduced the proper pronunciation of the name of this noted German in the camps of the Army of the Potomac early in 1863, when Schurz made his debut as a general in the field. In the reorganization of the troops after the battle of Fredericksburg a division was placed under the command of General Schurz, who was really in the diplomatic service and on leave of absence. During a grand review the president sat with the headquarters group, and as the division of General Schurz marched up General Crook, who commanded a corps, remarked loud enough for all to hear, "Here comes Schurz," pronouncing the name Schurs in the usual way among Americans. Lincoln promptly turned and said, "Not Schurs, general, but Schurz." The reformed pronunciation few around headquarters, for there was a kind of German in the top just then who prided themselves on eastern culture and were not in the habit of taking lessons from the prairie belt.

Much was expected of General Schurz in the army on account of his reputation as a revolutionary patriot. There were noted Germans of the same stripe, really comrades of Schurz in 1848, who made splendid soldiers in subordinate positions, principally as captains of field artillery. But somehow Schurz's execution as a leader was not high. Probably his temperament and not his courage was the fault. Napoleon would have called him an ideologist. He saw things as they ought to be, not as they are. He became a critic of Lincoln's methods and of other leaders after Lincoln. Foreign trained minds are apt to think that in this virgin soil anything can be done that the leaders had not done. Our institutions are a growth. The people rule, and they constitute a big sovereign to be enlightened and convinced. Our executives wouldn't be autocratic if they could, because the very idea of our system is to let the people find out what they want and stand for it.

Carl Schurz was a noble representative in this country of his race. He held the respect of the German element, whether native or foreign born. Good citizens were attracted to this country because of the Schurz who honored here. He and his fellow exiles of 1848 were the pioneers of a great movement to America of intellectual, liberty loving Germans, and during the two decades from 1850 to 1870 approximately 2,000,000 souls from the fatherland settled in the United States, and through them the German nationality secured the high position it now holds in every field of activity. No native American has exceeded him in fidelity to liberty and to truth, and no German-American has equaled him in the history of this republic in the ability to inspire to create and to incite noble thoughts of noble themes or to move men to high endeavor on behalf of high principle and policies in our national life.

May Weather and the Crops.

The Germans have a saying to the effect that "a wet April and cool May fill the bins in the cellar and makes plenty of hay." People in towns who shivered during the cold wave in May didn't at all relish that touch of March-like weather, even though it would make the grass grow so you could "at most see" it growing. The weather in a good corn country during a hot July.

Fortunately the cold wave, which extended across the continent and touched even the south, was unaccompanied by killing frosts, except in a few places. There was no snowfall of any account recorded by the weather bureau, which considers May 14 the snow limit since that record was made some years ago. Anyway the time on docket with overcoats and wraps in a May blast isn't worth naming in contrast with the good that may be done to growing things outdoors.

That Hindoo prince of exalted rank and so much wealth that he and his "missus" walk on jewels should have brought along a certificate showing where he "got it." Nabobs who merely represent high finance are no novelty in America, whatever their color or the cut of their clothes.

Secretary Shaw tells the young men of the country that the government service is good for sleep and regular living of the yeoman. That's a reason why there is such a rush for berths and also a reason why boys of the right stuff should strike out on their own book.

What with earthquake and shaky public structures that fall without any quaking but their own the innocent bystander should do his bystanding act in the park or safer yet in a ten acre lot where the jerry builder is unknown.

With a citizen of the United States cutting his third set of teeth, his slinky-fifth birthday it is plain that the application of Dr. Osler's dictum "depends upon the man."

We all have to pay a losing game now and then, but it takes some of the sting out of defeat to know that we are "up against" something really worth while.

Drop Your Gun!

All the world is reading the book which inspired the czar to call the peace conference and recently won a $40,000 prize as a universal peace promoter. The work is running through new editions in various languages and has already reached the sixth in English. In the form of a story the author, Baroness von Butner, appeals to the nations to obey in the most literal sense the military command which is adopted as the title of the book, "Ground Arms!" The horrors of war and the blessings of peace are the arguments used.

In the opinion of Baroness von Butner republics are less inclined to war than monarchies. This is as much as to say that we people are opposed to war and rulers favor it for ultimately selfish ends. In individual affairs it is the man with the gun who gets into trouble because he is ready for it. If the carrying of private weapons were abolished there would be fewer bloody affairs. With nations the power to back up large ambitions and pretensions fosters these traits. It is the people who pay for the war game, and it is for them to echo and re-echo the command of the peacemaker, "Drop your gun!"

Fortunate Missourians.

"When I was a druggist, at Livonia, Mo.," writes T. J. Dwyer, now of Grayville, Mo., "three of my customers were permanently cured of consumption by Dr. King's New Discovery, and are well and strong to day. One was trying to sell his property and move to Arizona, but after using New Discovery a short time he found that he was cured. I regard Dr. King's New Discovery as the most wonderful medicine in existence." Sore throat, cough and cold cure and Throat and Lung healer. Guaranteed by Barrington Pharmacy. 50c and $1. ## Postmaster Robbed.

G. W. Fouts, Postmaster at Riverton, Ia., nearly lost his life and was robbed of all comfort, according to his own words, by a chronic liver complaint, which led to such a severe case of jaundice that he found his finger nails turned yellow, when his doctor prescribed Electric Bitters, which cured me and have kept me well for eleven years." The habit of the fruit or shade tree, like that of the child, is most easily fixed by careful attention in the first few years.

The mop stick and broom, scrub rug and dust pan acquire these days. At first thought it seems tough, but think how nice everything will be when it is all over!

Don't be longing for an automobile when you have a fine team of horses at your command. The horses are not half as likely to land you in a ditch and you can't get out of their hands if you are playing out before you've reached your destination.

The development of a tractable and desirable harness or work horse depends almost as much upon the disposition and character of the person having the care of it as upon the original temperaments of the horse itself. A careless driver can spoil a mighty good horse.

The era is past when it is safe to say that the man who can't make a go of it in any other line of business can succeed at farming. Brains and intelligence are now required in this, as in any other occupation, and he will be disappointed who takes it up as a last resort.

An item is going the rounds of the country press to the effect that two or three grains of flaxseed planted in each hill of potatoes will keep away the potato bug. We are somewhat skeptical in regard to the efficacy of this preventive, being tempted to classify it with that other agricultural superstition which recommends planting in the fall of the moon.

Two farmers living but a short distance from the writer's home have been called upon in the past few weeks to pay $50 each for damages done a neighbor's flock of sheep by their worthless dogs. If a canine has once committed this offense he can never be trusted again, and the only remedy is a shotgun loaded with buckshot or a dose of poison. In dogdom this is a capital offense, and the only penalty commensurate is death.

In addition to planning to turn over to the boy a fine farm when you throw off the harness, aim to give him the best possible education that is within your means. It is rarely possible that he may not at the time fully realize what you are doing for him, but rest assured that the gentleness and appreciation will find full expression as the years pass by. The first thing you owe the lad is a good family name, the second as good an education as you can give him, and lastly and of least importance is the bestowal of lands or other property. He will likely forgive you if you fail in the last particular, but not hardly do so if you are remiss in the first two.

We do not recall the investment of a small amount of time and effort that brought a larger return of genuine satisfaction than that consumed in the fixing of a little platform which was suspended in a large cherry tree within view of the dining room window, on which a supply of bread and milk was placed for the birds that nested near by. A particularly entertaining sight was that furnished when a mother oriole and five of her young, just able to fly, came to the board for their morning meal, which quite often occurred during the breakfast hour. The mother bird, evidently thinking this supply was quite a find, for she and her brood visited it regularly, and to see her feeding her little ones in turn was a most interesting spectacle for any lover of bird life. A little pains taken in such a manner to cultivate the acquaintance and friendship of these little feathered friends is well worth while.

Following a gradual and steady advance in value of all Mississippi valley real estate drainage has been found to consider and adopt methods of draining wet and heretofore practically unproductive land. As a result of the passage of favorable legislation a number of big drainage ditches are now in process of digging in several counties of western Iowa and southern Minnesota. It is estimated that the largest of these drainage ditches will have been completed in the neighborhood of $200,000. It will be from five to seven feet deep and have a width of about 120 feet. This ditch will serve as the main artery of a drainage system that will accommodate the surface water from thousands of acres of the finest and richest of land that only needs draining out to the point where it can be properly tilted to produce the most abundant crops. Farms at a distance from the main ditch on either side will be tiled into smaller ditches connected with it. The work connected with the digging of the drainage canal is now prosecuted as fast as the money can be connected there-with. These lands have been benefited by the drainage.
