One of the veteran lawyers of Burlington, Vt., is A. V. Spalding, writes F. H. Kelsey of Lowell, in the Boston Globe. One day when he was trying a case in the Chittenden county court he called as a witness as a stylishly hadr in the middle, a practice that used to be regarded as indicative of a "dude". The young man, however, save his testimony in a plain, straightforward manner and resumed his seat. When the argument came to be made by the counsel opposed to Mr. Sfalding, reference was made in a peculiarly cutting manner to the foppish looking witness who parted his hair in the middle.

WHAT IS A GOOD ROAD?

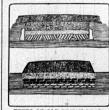

A Discussion by Edward K. Parkin son, and Comment by Editor Country Gentleman.

The best roads that have ever been built were those constructed by the Romans ten or fifteen centrales ago, and which are today almost perfect examples of what roads should be. Their roads had a width of 30 feet, and pavements of heavy stone at the bottom, and often one or more layers of stone bedded in cement to make the road waterproof. The two cuts show the best types of ancient Roman roads.

ross waterproof. The two can some the best types of ancient Roman roads.

It has been argued that such roads would cost too much to build in these days of high wages. To be sure, the initial cost would be enormously greater, but the final cost would, on the other hand, be much less.

Some of the Roman roads are 1,500 years old, and are still in fair condition. I will say, for the sake of argument, that a modern macedam that the same of that time, however, and the same of that time, however, and will have to be practically reconstructed, at least to the extent of half the original cost. So a new road will be

CONQUERING SQUASH BUG. Best Methods of Protecting the Vines from the Ravages of This Pest.

From the Ravages of This Pest.

After the squashes, cuembers and melons are well starred the aquash bug makes its appearance. Those who have a garden know the flat, rusty-black creature with its vile odor. In spring or early summer the eggs are laid on the leaves and stems of plants, sometimes singly, but usually in groups of from 12 to 50. They are brownish-yellow and easily found. Fortunately the insect confines its attention almost entirely to cucurbitateous plants.

As the bugs grow they scatter over the control of the co water, as their bodies are soft and unprotected. But the old bugs are proof against this kind of treatment. Their hard-heiled backs protect them. The most practicable remedy thus far seems to be hand picking, says the Orange Judd Parmer. It should begin with the first bug and be ifpeated at short intervals. The best time for it is in the morning while it is cool and the bugs sluggish. A convenient way is to drop the bugs into a can containing water with a little kerosen. The bugs will swim in clear water, but the film of oil on the surface is sure death. Boards or alleigher placed on the ground are any will seek these shelters in mid-afternoon and remain dormant till it is warm in the morning, when they can casily be gathered. Crushing the eggs on the leaves is a preventive measure that should not be neglected.

So far as my experience goes, the best way to guard against the bug is to plant the vines among potatoes. It has rarely found them there. I have grown good crops of squashes in this way and found few or none of the insects, though in other places they were numerous.

The Water Supply.

It is fine to have plenty of good water on the farm for everything, and some means should be resorted to to get such a supply if it is lacking. The gasoline engine simplifies this proposition very much.

They tell this one on former Gov. George Hoaddy of Ohio:

Once upon a time, in the midst of a campaign, Mr. Hoaddy was to deliver a speech at a little town in the great and glorious Buckeys Stata. When he reached the one hotel the town boasted he walked up to the register and wrote his name. The proprietor-head porter-stewist-headwalter-depot - runner was behind the desk in his shirt sieyers, his hat on the back of his head, and a clear stump held between down his John Hancock, the factorium turned the register around, read without the ficker of an eyeld the name there written, wrote "10" beside it with a lead speech; and said:
