His Natural Self

If anybody had given a party with a prize for the most helpless husband there was not but one contestant. Dockety would have gone home with the prize under his arm. This was an indisputable fact, for his wife said so and she should have possessed expert knowledge on the subject.

"If you should turn James Dockety loose in the middle of a desert," she often said, "with an eagle in plain sight, that helpless man would turn and walk the other way and die of starvation. Here I am, wearing myself to a shreds remembering to remind him of what he ought to do or telling him where he put his pink striped shirt or getting him more towels when those in the bathroom have slipped down back of the tub! You'd think that the man never heard of the back of the bathtub the way he forgets to reach behind it! He's more trouble than a family of ten children! I declare, his helplessness dooms me to become old before my time."

She never knew where he had put his umbrella when there was a rain-storm that he had to go out in. He was perturbed with a dismal sort of horror if he had to hunt out his own apparel. It was on record that once when they were dining out and Mrs. Dockety had gone on ahead to spend the day he didn't come. When finally she telephoned him he told his exasperated wife with tears in his voice that somehow he couldn't possibly get a white tie on that looked right.

"Where are you getting your dress from?" Mrs. Dockety inquired with an arched brow.

"From the little drawer to the left in the top of the chiffonier," recited Dockety, pathetically.

"Those," breathed Mrs. Dockety over the phone, "are my white summer belts! Look in the drawer below!"

She often said with pathos that if James would only reform she would be the happiest woman on earth. It was nothing short of tragic then when Dockety had to go west on business and his return was delayed three months. Mrs. Dockety worried incessantly over him. "If he wasn't so helpless," she said, "it wouldn't be so bad, but he'll lose everything he has and will come home with his cuffs tied on with strings! He won't be able to find a thing and nobody will look out for him. He'll have a pair of pajamas hanging in the closet of every hotel room he's in! I'm afraid he won't get enough to eat, because he has never known how he wants and always insists on my picking out things on the bill of fare."

When at last Dockety returned home he looked his wife heartily. His coat was on right side up and his right shoe was not upon his left foot. He was wearing his own hat, his linen was presentable and he was short only one pair of pajamas.

"Do you feel well, James?" Mrs. Dockety asked, anxiously.

"If I felt any better," declared her husband, "I'd be sick abed from it!"

At breakfast Dockety put sugar and cream on his berries as nonchalantly as if he had always known how. He picked up his umbrella from behind the door and produced his gloves all right. When he had gone Mrs. Dockety set down and heaved a hard sigh. She could not understand it.

That evening it was still worse. Dockety dressed without once asking where anything was. When his wife said that she had come to put in the shirt studs Dockety looked surprised and said they were already in. He even got out his silk hat and brushed it, whistling cheerily, while Mrs. Dockety stood around making futile efforts to help him.

She was pale and not herself all evening and persisted in turning her partner's face. When they started home not only did her husband find his own wraps, but he got hers and helped her into them.

She did not speak all the way home. When Dockety turned out the hall lights instead of waiting for her to do it she fled upstairs to hide her emotion.

Just when Mrs. Dockety had reached the point where she decided that the queer feeling which possessed her meant that she was going to die Dockety came with hesitating steps into the room.

"Dear," he murmured, "I can't find the soap—it isn't in the soap dish—and where are my bedroom slippers?"

It was then that his wife cast her eyes upon his bosom and dissolved in a flood of tears. "It—it's p—probably slipped down on the S-S-floor!" she sobbed. "Why—why're in your slippers—backing your rear end shoes! Oh, James, you haven't sensed natural Oh, this natural! I thought I'd lost you! I don't like to drive you blind after your—your—I don't want natural!"

"Well," cried the neighborhood Dockety, "I wouldn't worry! I mean I haven't noticed enough in three months as you'd really notice it. Say, I wish you'd help me—I can't get this blessed tie loose!"—Chicago Daily News.

Why do you call that tie by such a name? I want her to say so.

Relics of Cross Roads.
One of the most impressive of all the old ruins in Rome is the great Colosseum. It was in this open air amphitheater that the cruel spectacles were witnessed—gladiators fought in mortal combat, Christians were made to fight starving lions and tigers. Death was inevitable. The Colosseum had a seating capacity of 87,000 persons.

Troubles of the Barrower.
"Only a couple of months ago you said you'd share your last dollar with me," said Jones, who was unsuccessfully attempting to negotiate a loan. "I know I did, old man," replied the one who was doing the tightwad act; "but I haven't got down to my last dollar yet."—Judge.
