USELESS

"Henry," began Mrs. Sweet tentatively, as her husband finished his breakfast and reached for the morning paper. "I'm going shopping today."

"Uh-huh," responded Mr. Sweet from behind his paper.

"I need some things from downtown, Henry," Mrs. Sweet went on. "Besides, I'll have to change that ribbon you matched for me. It isn't the right shade."

"Uh-huh," said Mrs. Sweet petulantly, "I don't believe you are listening at all."

"Course I am," returned her husband, as he turned to the sporting page. "You said something about a shade."

"I said," repeated Mrs. Sweet, with emphatic distinctness, "the ribbon you matched for me isn't the right shade."

Mr. Sweet lowered his paper and looked across at his wife.

"It's baby blue, isn't it?" he asked.

"Yes," she said, "I returned his wife."

"But you know, Henry, I haven't been able to wear that shade of blue this last ten years."

Mr. Sweet lifted the paper to his eyes, then lowered it again.

"Why not?" he asked.

Mrs. Sweet studied her empty tea-cup.

"Why not?" her husband persisted.

"Because I am growing stout," she answered, reluctantly.

Mr. Sweet started.

"How does that bar you?" he asked.

"Some people are so dense," his wife returned, pointedly.

Mr. Sweet grinned.

"Am I worse than the majority?" he asked.

"You are worse than—some," his wife qualified.

"For instance?"

Mrs. Sweet balanced a spoon on the edge of her tea-cup.

"Like a person," her husband challenged.

"I could," asserted Mrs. Sweet.

"Do," her husband encouraged.

"There's Mr. Joy," began Mrs. Sweet.

"Who's he?" interrupted her husband.

"He lives in the brown cottage across the street," explained Mrs. Sweet.

"Follow with Dundermyr wind-breakers?" questioned her husband.

"I am sure his whiskers are very nice," said Mrs. Sweet.

"How'd you like to see me break out in that kind of ballstone catches?" grinned her husband.

"Hi."

"Say it," urged Mr. Sweet. "Don't spare my feelings."

A twinkle appeared in Mrs. Sweet's eyes, as she returned.

"You couldn't wear them for the same reason that I can't wear baby blue."

"Disqualified because of overweight," grinned Mr. Sweet. "But about the gentleman with the microbe-catcher; is he less obtuse than I?"

Mrs. Sweet nodded.

"Go any other good qualities I lack?" went on her husband.

"His wife can trust him to bring the exact things she sends him for," returned Mrs. Sweet.

"Good eye, eh? Participate some more."

"He anticipates her slightest wishes."

"Must be a wizard," commented Mr. Sweet. "Go on."

"He looks after the furnace in winter, without grumbling; and, in summer, takes care of the lawn."

"Model husband," admitted Mr. Sweet. "But how did you get such a straight line on him?"

"Their servants and ours are acquainted," explained Mrs. Sweet.

"I see," grinned her husband, much enlightened. "Anything else Mr. Model Husband does that I don't and might?"

"When the weather permits, he takes the baby out for an airing."

"I took ours out the other night," grinned Mr. Sweet, "and when we returned you nearly broke up the game."

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself, Henry Sweet," said Mrs. Sweet indignantly. "The idea of keeping that boy out till long past midnight!"

"He's 16," asserted her husband. "And he feels the weight of his years, let me tell you."

"Don't forget my shopping money," Mrs. Sweet reminded him, as her husband arose from the table.

"How much do you need?" he asked, taking out his pocketbook.

"Twenty-five dollars will be sufficient," said Mrs. Sweet, after an moment's hesitation.

Mr. Sweet took four five-dollar bills from his wallet.

"By the way," he ventured casually, "I suppose Mr. Joy never short-changes on his wife when she asks for shopping money?"

"I've never seen him," Mrs. Sweet admitted, reluctantly. "You see, his wife takes people."

"I thought so," grinned Mr. Sweet, as he slipped one of the bills back into the pocketbook and handed his wife the rest. "There's always a 50c bill in the pocketbook somewhere. Here's my card."

Girls Take the Lead.

Judging by the facts, women are pretty fully in possession of formal education. If we examine this monopoly a little more carefully we shall find that while in the kindergarten and in the elementary schools boys furnish 51 per cent of the enrollment, simply because more boys are born in civilized communities than girls, as soon as we reach the high schools girls increasingly take the lead.

His "American Name."
A small Italian boy, after due attendance upon the public school, asked his teacher if he might not change his name and have, instead of his true patronymic, "a 'merican name." "What name would you like?" asked the teacher. Proudly the lad produced a scrap of paper on which was written—"Patrick Dennis McCarthy."

Inventor of the Telephone.
In 1861 Philip Reis showed the principle of the telephone, and was able to transmit musical sounds and even words. Alexander Graham Bell perfected the inadequate apparatus of Reis, exhibiting his work in 1876, and put the discovery at the service of everybody.

The Trials of a Traveler.

"I am a traveling salesman," writes H. E. Young, of Berkeley, Vt., "and was often troubled with constipation and indigestion till I began to use Dr. King's New Life Pills, which I have found an excellent remedy." For all stomach, liver or kidney troubles they are unequalled. Only 25c at Barrington Pharmacy.
