THE TURKEY THAT CAME TOO LATE

By TEMPLE BAILEY.

THEY stood together in the bare grayness of the November forest. Above them, a single star shined in the sky, and the man, and the girl, whose scarlet shawl was as red as her lips.

"I want snow," she said, "for Thanksgiving. It seems as if the snow is so much for a moment he hesitated, then he burst out the truth, "I'm afraid there won't be any turkey, honey."

"Oh, she looked up at him quickly. "But you said you said that you would get one, Jed."

"I know, but there don't seem to be any wild turkeys in these woods; I've hunted and hunted," said her lover, with some dreariness.

"It seems as if you couldn't have hunted very hard," she drew away from him. "Think how disappointed the children will be—Jed."

"I know. But if there ain't any turkeys, there ain't any—"

"Yes, I said I'd get one if there was one to be got, but they don't grow on trees, you know."

But she did not smile. "Sometimes I think," she said, warily, "that you are just like dad. All my life he has promised and promised that he'd do things, and he ain't ever done them. And when I promised to marry you, I thought that I'd found a man that was different, and I loved you because you were strong, and because you weren't lazy like dad—but sometimes lately—"

His lips were set in a straight line. "Well, what have you thought lately?" he demanded.

"That you ain't no you grow older you'd be like the rest of the men of somewhere, not stagnating among the hills.

He thought of it all as he tramped after the turkey. It seemed to him suddenly that his quest took on a sacred significance. He had promised Mandy a turkey. He must keep his promise or be less a man.

The blackness of the November night settled over the forest. As he came out upon a crazy turn of the path he could see, far up, the light in Mandy's cottage window. He knew that she was making her simple preparations for the Thanksgiving dinner. Without the turkey there would be only the usual dried meat and corn-bread, with perhaps a little festivity added in the way of a simple pudding and with raisins in it. Jed had bought the turkey at the store in the city many miles away, on one of the rare and tedious trips when he laid in his stores for the winter.

With the thought of the city came a vision of the shops as he had seen them then. Men did not hunt for turkeys there—they brought them from the butcher, above whose stalls the big birds hung in plump rows.

He laughed a little as he thought of them, and laughed again as a resolve grew slowly in his mind. Then he counted the money in his pocket. It was enough. There would be many miles to travel to the city and back again. But Mandy would have her turkey for the next day's dinner.

That night the snow fell. By morning the road was almost impassable. Mandy, high up in the little cabin, looked out with anxious eyes. Suppose Jed had hunted all night and had been lost in the forest? Such things had happened even to experienced woodsmen, when they were overcome by cold. She prepared a simple dinner, bearing patiently the complaints of her father and of the disappointed children.

"Jed ain't no good," said the old man as he stuck his fork into the dried meat. "I thought he said he'd bring a turkey."

"He did say so," Mandy responded, "but they ain't any wild turkeys left in the woods."

"They're plenty of turkeys for them as hunts them," sneered the old man.

"Jed ain't no good."

"He's better than the rest of you," Mandy's father then apologized penitently. "I didn't mean to be hateful, father."

But the children's disappointment was hard to bear.

"I don't want to be thankful," little Annabel wailed, when Mandy tried to talk of the reason of the feast. "I want some turkey—and I want it before I can be thankful a bit."

Mandy felt, however, that if she only knew that Jed was safe she could raise her heart in thanksgiving. The night was muffled now. A neighbor had struggled through the snow for that it was the worst storm in years, and that nothing had been seen of Jed since the night before.

Daylight died, and night darkened, and Mandy set a candle in the window. She knew that Jed would come straight to her if he came back alive. Indeed, she felt that even if he were dead his spirit might return to her over the snow.

The figure that staggered suddenly out of the darkness into the circle of light made by the candle might have been a ghost, so white was it with the flakes of the falling snow, so noiseless the footsteps on the covered ground.

"Jed!" Mandy shrieked, and ran to meet him.

He was worn out with the journey, and fell on his knees before the fire, but in his arms was a bundle which he held out to Mandy. "I brought your turkey, dear," he whispered, and fell over in a dead faint.

And when he waked, Mandy was bending over him. "Oh, Jed," she said, "and that ain't all I got in the city, sweetheart."

It was not until the next day when Mandy served the turkey all brown and crackling that he told the good news. He had been promised a place in the butcher shop where they sold the turkeys, and Mandy and he would be married, and with dad and the children they would move to a house lower down on the mountain side. "I am going to keep a horse," Jed said, "and I can drive home every night, and some day I am going to have a business of my own, Mandy."

Mandy's eyes shone. "I always felt that you were different, Jed," she whispered with her cheek against the roughness of his coat, "and—and now I know."

Word "Chore" Not Slang.
 The word "chore," generally used in the plural, is not slang, but an English word of highly respectable lineage. In this form it is found only in America. In England the spelling and pronunciation being "char," though this is rarely used except in combination with "woman"—"char-woman." But in some of the provincial dialects, that of Cornwall, for example, the word "chower" is used precisely as we use "chore." All these forms come down to us from the Anglo-Saxon word "cerra," or "cerra." to turn over.

Britain's Colonial Possessions.
 The colonial possessions of Great Britain are divided into three classes—crown colonies, representative institutions, and responsible governments. In crown colonies the crown has the entire control of legislation; the administration being carried on by military officers under the control of the home government. Basutoland, Bechuanaland, the Fiji Islands, North Borneo and most of the African and Asiatic possessions are crown colonies.

Meredith on French Criticism.
 I hold strongly to the value of French criticism, whether in praise or blame. The latter is done (by the masters in the art) with so fine an irony that it instructs without wounding any but the vainest person; and the eulogy confers great laurels instead of gilt. England has little criticism beyond the expression of likes or dislikes, the most vindictive of an old conservatism of taste—Meredith's Letters in Scribner's Magazine.

Woman's Bank Account.
 Women in the habit of deducting some checks four or five times and others not at all, of adding fictitious deposits and skipping real ones while keeping their bank account crooked—these women may find consolation in the tale of a local housewife. Her husband, on going over the stubs of her check book, found that on nine different occasions she had added in the date.

Bay Rum Fountain.
 Not even Cologne has the perfume that is named for it flowing free. But down on the island of St. Thomas, in the West Indies, there is a fountain that gushes forth the great specialty of the place—bay rum. The fountain is on the left-hand of a cove and is so attractively situated that it is not only the dominant odor of St. Thomas. This town is the great bay rum market of the world, and everywhere it is hilly smells the same of small.

Time's Changes.
 Among what may be described as unadorned tales the following from an exchange is an ingenious specimen: "I Tennyson had lived in my suburb," said paternalistic the other night as he truthfully contemplated his gas bill. "He would never have written, 'Home the Light Brigade!' honor the charge they made! But perhaps the companies had consciousness in his hair."

Spiced Up.
 "You know I advised you halt a show this season, we were married," said Mr. Brown to his wife as he placed her husband. "I suspect that's what has kept me from ever visiting you ever again."

To You, Mr. O. P. Partridge.
 Was a speech in common parlance of number and again it is ready to be used. It is not heavy, it is not vulgar, it is not unbecoming, and it is not a waste of time.

Staggered Suddenly Out of the Darkness.

the mountain. "You'd just let things slide and not care—"

"And all this because you won't have turkey for Thanksgiving," he flung out.

Her eyes met his squarely. "You know it isn't that," she said. "You know it's because I want you to show that you are different from the others before I marry you."

Her hand was on his arm, mutely asking his forgiveness for her criticism. But he jerked himself away.

"Excuse I'd make such a fuss about a turkey," he said, and was gone.

That afternoon he tramped the woods in futile search. He raged at her arraignment of his manhood. In the depths of his soul, however, he knew that she was right. He had let the days before Thanksgiving pass without worrying himself mightily about the turkey, and now, at the last moment, he would have to disappoint her.

And all her life little Mandy had not disappointed. Motherless and with four small sisters, she had lived on the mountain, the household drudge for her shiftless father. When he had woe, her love for Jed had, for the time, been inspired with a greater industry than that of the men about him. But gradually he had dropped back, and he knew and Mandy knew, that before them, both stretched the full dreariness that was the common lot of the mountaineer of that section.

"You would get out of it if you would," Mandy had said. And when Jed had questioned her helplessly. "How?" she had flung out. "Oh, if you were a man you would work, and that had been the first quarrel."

Since that, there had been many little quarrels, and Jed knew that Mandy was often right under the shadow of his incompotence. And she was right. By all the vigor of young manhood that was in him, he knew that he should be doing a man's work

Horses and Musc.
 The Swiss horses is apparently a very musical animal—or not, according to the hearer's ear. Strings of bells are hung round their necks, producing a musical jangle at every step. Some of the horses with the most bells, I noticed, were the thinnest—apparently they went without food to buy bells. A horse like that ought to be restrained.

Before the Days of Shorthand.
 As all the world knows, the inimitable Samuel Pepys wrote his diary in shorthand and by the same means took down in 1690 Charles II's own account of the battle of Worcester. Previous to this the debates in the House of Commons at the time of the arrest of the five members by Charles I. were said to have been taken down verbatim by one John Rushworth.

What He Didn't Understand.

"We bring it down from the mountain in those flumes," explains the western cousin. "I see all that plainly enough, but how in the dickens do you pump it up to the top of the mountain?"

Meet Nelsness Goodie He Had.
 The new clerk was doing his best to be accommodating, but it seemed to him that his customer was trying to call for things of which he had never heard. Finally he asked, "Have you any alien cloth?" Doubt shrouded his face for a moment, then he brought down a box and triumphantly showed a number.

BARBARA'S INVITATION

REALLY don't see how we could go to thank Barbara's for Thanksgiving dinner this year," Mrs. Maddox said thoughtfully. "You are sure so intimate to ask us?" "Yes," Mrs. Lawler returned. "Just as I was leaving town I met her on the street. She spoke of our being neighbors, and then she told me that she was going to ask you all out to an old-fashioned Thanksgiving dinner. I wouldn't have mentioned it, but I supposed that you had your invitation."

"It would be fine to go there," Marion remarked. "Her pumpkin pies are about three inches deep, and her turkeys are always cooked to a Titian brown and her cranberry sauce is so delicious."

"The youngest of the Maddox family was overcome by the error of this description. "Oh, let's all go to Aunt Barbara's for Thanksgiving!" he cried.

"I had hinted to Mary Thomas that we might ask her here," said his mother.

"Somebody else is sure to ask Mary," declared Marlon.

"We have tickets for the Thanksgiving matinee."

"Take 'em back."

And your father and I are asked to a whist party at the Grangers' in the evening."

"Send regrets,"

"Well, we can't hear what your father and Jack say," Mrs. Maddox said.

When Maddox and Jack came home to dinner they were met with the news that Mrs. Lawler had seen Aunt Barbara, and that they were all to be invited to the country for Thanksgiving. "I don't see how I can get away," Mr. Maddox said.

But Mrs. Maddox had gone over to the store, and she proceeded to show how they could all leave the city late on Wednesday afternoon and return early on Friday morning, send regrets to the Grangers, return their matinee tickets and have "Thomas" dinner invitation until Christmas time.

"After all, Aunt Barbara is getting old and we ought to make an effort to go," Maddox said. So all the details were arranged and the family settled back in a state of expectancy, awaiting the written invitation.

Every day the youngest Maddox met the postman, demanding a letter from his great aunt, but the days passed, and none came. During the last week before the holiday the interest of the family became almost feverish. Four days before the feast Mrs. Maddox spoke of writing a note to Aunt Barbara accepting the alleged invitation conveyed by Mrs. Lawler. But the others argued that if Aunt Barbara had forgotten to send a formal invitation, she was not expecting a formal acceptance. "She takes silence for consent, and she's too busy making pies to write," Jack said.

The day before Thanksgiving came around, but no letter from Aunt Barbara. The family held council at breakfast. "Of course, she expects us," Marlon observed. "She's absent-minded, and she probably wrote a letter and stuck it behind the clock, waiting for somebody to go to the postoffice."

It was agreed that Maddox and Jack should return early from the office, then they would all take an evening train to the country and drop in on their aunt just at bedtime. Mrs. Maddox told the cook and housemaid that they could go away immediately after lunch and not return until Friday.

The Maddox family were almost ready to get on the train when the postman left a letter in Aunt Barbara's cramped writing. "It is so fortunate that we are all ready," Mrs. Maddox said, as she tore open the envelope. "Here is our invitation now."

Aunt Barbara sent greetings to all and then went on to say that she had lately seen Mrs. Lawler and she told her that she was going to ask the Maddox family to Thanksgiving dinner. "You must be sure to come," she concluded. "That's why I am asking you so long before."

The youngest Maddox set up a loud wail. Marlon called Mrs. Lawler "a stupid thing" and the rest looked at each other with foolish smiles.

This is the reason that on Thanksgiving day the Maddox family set down to stink, boiled potatoes, and a sticky rice pudding.

The appropriate sentiments of my aunt are especially appropriate for Thanksgiving.

AT THE CHICAGO THEATRES

MAJESTIC.
Eva Tangus, who is the headliner for this week at the Majestic theatre, Chicago, is so noted that she needs no introduction to the public patron. During several seasons she has drawn record houses at that theatre, and she comes now to the theatre in a triumphantly successful tour to sing her eccentric songs, some of them new and others those that the public insists on hearing from year to year. The bill is otherwise one of exceptional brilliance.

Jesse Lasky, the greatest of vaudeville producers, presents for the first time in Chicago, a comedy opera, "In The Barabacks," which is a big production requiring a lot of people and developing music and comedy along unusual lines. Ward & Curran, two of the old time vaudeville stars who have entertained more than one generation of variety lovers, respond in their new program specially entitled "The Stage Door Tender," which is said to court an unusual amount of character comedy, all developed in a legitimate manner.

John P. Wade & Company play comedy sketches: Bert Van Klein and Grace Gibson offer a lively series of impersonations, and Curran in a typical manner. The "Stinger" Trio with comedy bar net Billy Shiano and Beatrice Turk in an interesting specialty and La Vier in a novelty rap act set round out a bill that is exceptionally entertaining.

PRINCESS.
"Bought and Paid For" now the most popular dramatic production in Chicago, began its sixth week at the Princess theatre of that city, with endorsements from the public as well as the press. Dr. Arthur J. Francis, minister of the Pilgrim Congregational church, of Englewood has used the theme of the play as the text of a sermon. He pronounced it as one of the most wholesome dramas he had ever seen.

"I feel that George Broadhurst, the author, is to be congratulated upon his theme in 'Bought and Paid For,'" said Dr. Francis, "and I feel that William A. Brady, the producer, is to be congratulated with the military aid with the best in human life by starting this play. I feel like congratulating all who have shared, or who are sharing in putting forth this work—no price is too high or reward, as it is a case may be, by the witness of their remarks and humor of their setting, or by the author of the same."

"Bought and Paid For" is not essentially a religious play, a fact which makes the remarks of Dr. Francis all the more emphatic. It is a drama of the most poignant problems of married life in a manner that has no equal appeal. The husband's right to property purchased by his wife is the love, but she loves him less, he has no right to believe her "Bought and Paid For" says these things out between them, and she cannot give an unambiguous which brings mutual happiness.

All these are given on Thursday and Saturday.

Plagued Train With Shirt.
Tearing his shirt from his back at Ohio man fazed a train and saved it from a wreck, but H. T. Allison, Raleigh, C. O., once prevented a wreck with Electric Bitters. "I was in a terrible plight when I began to use them," he writes, "my stomach, head, back and kidneys were all badly affected and my liver was in bad condition, but four bottles of Electric Bitters made me feel like a new man." A trial will convince you of their matchless merit for any stomach, liver or kidney trouble. Price 50 cents at the Barrington Pharmacy—Adv.

No Time for Trifles.
"Have you ever stopped to consider the fact that if you had $1,000,000 the interest on it at the safe rate of 4 per cent. would amount to $40,000 a year?" "No; I've been kept so darn busy earning my $3 a day that I haven't had time to pause and consider folk things like that."—Chicago Record-Herald.

So They Danced After All.
At the conference of orthodox rabbis held in London last March a resolution was adopted discouraging dancing on the ground that "the practice of dancing with women is contrary to good morals."—New York Tribune.

Task for Geographers.
Algiers is said to have the largest European population of any city in Africa. Johannesburg comes next, then Oran. Will the class in geography kindly locate the latter town, with its 100,000 Europeans, without referring to the atlas?

A Great Building Falls.
When its foundation is undermined, and if the foundation of health—good digestion—is weakened, quick collapse follows. On the first signs of indigestion, Dr. King's New Life Pills should be taken to tone the stomach and regulate the liver, kidneys and bowels. Pleasant, easy, safe and only 25 cents at the Barrington Pharmacy—Adv.

Making Glass Tough.
Tumbler, wine glasses, lamp chimneys and other glasses may be rendered so durable as to be almost unbreakable by heating them in a manometer of cold water and gradually bringing it to boiling heat. Care should be taken that they do not touch each other during the boiling-up of the liquid.

Happiness.
Those who have the most of happiness think the least about it. But in thinking about and in doing their duty happiness comes—because the heart and mind are occupied with earnest thought that touches at a thousand points the beautiful and sublime realities of the universe.—Traveller.

Kindness to Animals.
Every family should put a few drops of cod liver oil in their coffee, tea, or milk, and they will be sure to get a good supply of cod liver oil in their coffee, tea, or milk.

CARY STATION.
William Greenwald and H. H. Grantham attended the I. O. O. F. grand lodge session at Peoria last week.

The Ladies Aid society was entertained at the home of Mrs. William Greenwald last Thursday afternoon.

Several markers were received recently to be placed at the heads of the soldiers graves in the local cemetery.

Two bus loads of young people from here attended the basket social at the Munshaville school house Friday evening.

Mrs. Rudolph Zurbinden returned last Friday from St. Joseph's hospital, Elgin, where she has been recovering from an operation performed five weeks ago.

Only A Fire Hero
but the crowd cheered, as with burned hands, he held up a small round box. "Follow!" he shouted, "this Buckle's Arctic Salve I hold, has everything best for burns." Right! also cuts, sprains, bruises, Stomach pain, it soothes inflammation, kills pain. Only 25 cents at the Barrington Pharmacy, Adv.

Famous Sentences.
A correspondent who lectures as to where the famous summary of Webster's career by Rufus Choate may be found—the sentence being omitted from some of the collections which publish the speech—is referred to "The Works of Rufus Choate," by S. G. Brown. The sentence contains 1,283 words.

Feminine Poverty.
Even the woman who wishes to talk all the time becomes impatient if her husband fails to try to get in a word now and then.

IT'S A SIGN
That You Want a Plumber and when you do, kindly remember our address. That is, if you want a thorough job, done by experts who use only the best materials and charge only reasonable prices—in spite of the professional jokers who would make plumbers wealthier than bankers. If we can only get rich in the enjoyment of plenty of satisfied patrons, we shall be more than satisfied.
