CHAPTER XXV—Centinued.

They plinged into it, plowing a way the property of the reluctant bornes dragging back the reluctant bornes dragging back the reluctant bornes dragging back the weep of the wind, in spite of sway effort at guid-ance. It was an awful journey, every step torture, but Hamilin bent to it, clinging firmly to the bit of his animal, his other arm protecting his eyes from the sting of the wind. Behind, Wasson wielded a quirt, careless whether the issh struck the horse's whether the issh struck the horse's whether the issh struck the horse's storm howled down upon them in redoubled fury, blinding their eyes, making them stagger helpiessly before its bleats.

They were still moving, now like doubled farry, blinding unerr eyes, making them stagger helpiessly before its blasts. They were still moving, now like snalls, when the pale sickly dawn came, revealing inch by inch the dread desolation, stretching white and ghasting in the stage of the strength of the strength of the stage of the stage

The smart of it, together with the roughness of handling, aroused the latter from letharry but Hamilin, ignoring his resentment, gripped the fallow violent ministrations such asked by the resentment, gripped the fallow violent ministrations such lands and stood himself erect, glowing from the exercise. Carroll gland up at him angrily out of red-rimmed eyes. "If get you for that, you hig boob!" "Hush up, George, and go to sleep," the other retorted, poking the shapeless body with his foot, his thoughts already elsewhere. "Don't be a fool, I'll get a fire if I can, and hour you'll be a man regard. Within an hour you'll be a man regard are, Carroll, until I come back, or I'll kick your ribs lin! "He bent down menacingly, seewing into the upburned face. "Will you mind, or shall I have to hand, you cand, or shall I have to hand, you cand, or shall i have to hand, you cand, of a shall have to hand, you cand, or shall i have to hand, you one?"

Carroll shrank back like a whipped child, his lips muttering something indistinguishable. The sergeant, satisfied, turned and floundered through the drifts to the bank of the stream.

He was alert and fearful, yet determined. No matter what danger of discovery might threaten, he must build a fire to save Carroll's life. The raging storm was not over with; present of the control of t there are very few wires, in fact the fewest number possible to hold the shape of the hat.

It is in the management of the veil that the designers find exercise for their variety of ideas. They are using hemstitched chiffon, either wire or narrow, and in lengths varying from 11% to three yards. Nearly all these veils are attached to the hat at the back or across the front or all around by a band of trimming which is placed by a band of trimming which is placed by a band of trimming which is placed of the veils are attached to the nat at the back or across the front or all around by a band of trimming which is placed of the veil statemed at the back with a hook and eye.

Jonger veils are brought over the fage and about the neck and tied in a loose knot. Wide veils, falling from the bottom to half the width of the veil. The split is finished with a sarrow hem. Each half of the veil where the to the back of the neck, where the to the back of the neck, where the rout and tied in a loose knot either directly in front or to one side.

Vivid colors are in great demand. Bright red silk bonnets with royal ing in pongee or other light weight silk. A noticeable feature is the sleeve with its narrow Irish crochet insertion. The pointed was been crochet insertion. The pointed was bridged with the light crochet. An extremely broad broad sird die effect is produced by the joining of two lengths of embroidery insertion by the lace. The scant little bodice with its drop shoulder is allowed to blouce slightly over the girdle. The skirt is platted at the sides.

To Lace the Corset Cover.

Instead of easing ribbons, get white erochet cotton, crochet a string, and run it through the top of the corset cover. Finish each eff with a little tassel of cotton, and you will have no rouble with broken strings. By crocheting a double thread you can run it through lingerie petitions. blue veils, blue with emerald green, while with green, etc., are everywhere, and tans are always stylish, and the taups boanet with veil to match contense in favor.
