Kitchen Termed Most Perilous Place in House

Although not generally recognized as such, the kitchen in the average Illinois home is the most dangerous place in the house, according to Gladys J. Ward, home management extension specialist at the college of agriculture, University of Illinois. It is literally filled with equipment and utensils capable of inflicting serious, and sometimes fatal, injuries unless carefully and properly handled.

This opinion is borne out by a home safety survey which shows that at least half of the accidents that happen in homes occur in the kitchen. Fully 40 per cent of these accidents result from falls, 13 per cent are cuts and scratches, and an equal number are in the nature of burns, scalds and explosions. Furthermore, kitchen accidents occur most often when the housemaker is tired or hurried.

On one side of the kitchen, points out Miss Ward, is the stove, a necessary piece of equipment but a possible menace to those who come near it, especially young children. Of the 206 deaths from burns in Illinois last year, an appreciable number can be traced to the kitchen stove. Often they are caused by the use of kerosene or gasoline when starting or reviving the fire.

On top of the stove may be a pot or pan of boiling liquid or grease with the handle carelessly left extending over the edge of the stove. Reaching by the hand of a curious child or accidentally hit by a hurrying adult, the steaming contents may strike pain and permanent scars to the youngster or person nearby.

Clumsy at hand is the kitchen sink, equally helpful in the preparation of meals but likewise the cause of many accidents. Water and grease splashed over the side of the sink and not wiped up promptly is a common cause of many serious falls.

Conveniently located may be the kitchen work table with its array of knives, forks, can openers and the like, while just as handy in the box of matches, all too often within the reach of young children.

To aid in preventing the numerous accidents that occur in Illinois kitchens every year, Miss Ward suggests five safety rules that should be observed. They are:

Wipe up at once any water or fat spilled on the floor.

Discard broken dishes, glassware and empty tin cans promptly.

Select and use a safe can opener.

Store knives and matches out of the reach of children.

"Make haste slowly" and rest for a few minutes when becoming tired. Fatigue and hurry are often the forerunners of accidents.
