Crude Sail Used to Aid Oarsmen to Propel Ships

The adaptation of sails came early in the history of navigation, notes a writer in the Chicago Tribune. The Egyptians first used a piece of square matting lashed to a single mast. This crude sail, however, was by no means the chief means of propelling the vessel. For hundreds of years the propelling force for all ships was principally supplied by oarsmen. Sails were in the beginning merely auxiliary assistants to the rowers and were used only when a following wind was present. Egyptian ships of the fifth dynasty represent a more practicable use of sails as a propelling force. Manipulation of the sail was aided by lines attached to the sail. Baskiatrys supported the mast. Steering was accomplished by paddles in the hands of steersmen on the stern platform. The commander, standing amidships, held a long pole, or a thong, with which he prodded the rowers when they were working.

From the primitive stages of art of shipbuilding and the skill of navigating vessels progressed to that stage which was represented by the comparatively huge ships known as galleys. The ancient Greeks and Romans, as well as the civilized nations bordering the Mediterranean and adjoining seas, used galleys effectively in war and peace. Galleys were common in the early centuries of the Christian era. The famous triremes of the Romans had lengths as great as 200 feet and were from 20 to 30 feet in width. They were equipped with large sails, but depended upon oars for the chief means of propulsion.

Climacteric Years

According to ancient Greek physiologists, the climacteric years of a man's life were respectively his seventh, twenty-first, forty-ninth, sixty-third, and eighty-first. These were regarded as the terminals of marked physical change, and were duly celebrated. The advent of the twenty-first year we still celebrate as the "coming of age" of a man—the end of the period of adolescence. The mystic numbers were seven and nine. Although the Spanish origin of the term "grand climacteria" is not known, it is probable that it arose from the multiplication of the two mystic numbers, and the age sixty-three is supposed to mark the beginning of the period of decline. —Literary Digest.
