Most of the community

For several centuries the natives of the Azores were lured by reason of the remote location of the islands in Mid-Atlantic. In more recent times this location has been a means of bringing the islands in touch with the other countries of the world. Corvo, the most remote of the group, has a single village of 60 souls dwelling at the base of an extinct volcano which is perhaps the most arctic community in the western world. Ruled by a council of elders and with a priest as the only physician, Corvo knows no contagion, crime, poverty or vice. Nor is there a lock on any door.

Beliefs

There's no virtue whatever in credulity. Anybody can believe anything. Believing is so much easier than thinking. That's why we have so few thinkers and so many believers. Neither belief nor disbelief can in the slightest degree affect fact. It was once held by a philosopher every human being that the earth was flat, had four corners and that if you got too near the edge you would fall off into everlasting space. But that didn't make it so. The earth never was flat, never had four corners; the sun never revolved around the earth once every day, rising in the east and setting in the west, as it was once believed.

Old Landmark Reduced

A court action in San Mateo, Calif., revealed the Earl Burd ranch, which included the entire San Francisco peninsula in Spanish California days, had dwindled to a single acre.

The Biggest Job

"His world was created in seven days," said Udo Eben. "but it is takin' millions of years for us humans to decide what to do wit' it."

Queen New Zealand Bird

The kiwi—its real name is apteryx, which means "wingless"—is one of the queerest birds. It has wings, but cannot fly; quills instead of feathers; it can roll itself up in a ball like a hedgehog, and has no tail.

Kiwis inhabit New Zealand. They are strange, shy birds, with long, strong beaks and thick legs, and their tiny wings, invisible under their quills, are quite useless. They live in the hills, and in the daytime hide in burrows in the ground, and they dislike the sun as much as owls do.

Kiwis live mostly on worms, which they dig up with their long beaks.

When Mr. and Mrs. Apteryx set up housekeeping, it is the hen bird who builds the nest in the ground. This she does at the end of a tunnel in the soft earth. Here she lays one or two large eggs. The eggs are so large they are equal to one-quarter the weight of the bird.

Having built the home and laid the eggs, the hen retires to a life of leisure and pleasure, while her husband takes charge of affairs. He hatches out the babies and looks after them until they are able to take care of themselves.

Beaver Mentioned Often in History of Old World

The beaver is not peculiar to America alone. It is mentioned frequently in ancient history and is met with in fossils and old place names in Europe and Asia. The use of beaver for the manufacture of top hats dates back to before the discovery of the New World. When the vast resources of the forests of the New World became known beaver wool became the indispensable material for the fashionable European hat. Nearly a century and a half after the discovery of America we at length find Charles I in 1638, by royal proclamation prohibiting the use of any materials except beaver wool in the manufacture of hats, unless made for exportation.

Less than a century thereafter, the beaver appeared to have been almost totally exterminated from the colonies to the south of the St. Lawrence and the great lakes. The French traders in 1748, imported into Rochelle 127,800 beaver skins, and the British Hudson's Bay Company sold 26,750 skins the same year. Within less than half a century afterwards, when Canada had become a British possession, the trade in beaver peltries seems to have reached its maximum, and to have been maintained with only a slight decline till the commencement of the present century. In 1788, upwards of 170,000 beaver skins were exported from Canada, and the value of those forwarded to England from Quebec alone, in 1808, is estimated at nearly $305,000.

The Word "Itasca"

Itasca is a coined word, invented from the two Latin words veritas and caput. The inventor took the last four letters of veritas and the first two of caput, making Itasca. Veritas caput means true head. Lake Itasca was considered the true source or source of the Mississippi river.

Reading Fun in Store for Boys

Here's important news for the boys of America. THE AMERICAN BOY—YOUTH'S COMPANION, the nation's quality magazine for boys, has been reduced from $2.00 a year to $1.00. The three-year rate, formerly $3.50, has been reduced to $2.00.

"For a long time we have been seeking a way to reduce the cost of THE AMERICAN BOY to readers," states Gertrude O'Connell, editor. "Recently we have effected savings that make this possible, and we think boys will agree that the new price is big news on the reading front. We hope boys will help us to spread the good news by telling their friends."

Along with the cut in cost, the magazine's publishers are planning a magazine that will continue to set the pace in fiction, articles, and departments. The favorite characters of millions of boys will parade through THE AMERICAN BOY in new stories. Douglas Reed of the Royal Canadian Mounted, Hide-rack, the red-and-gold collic, Bonehead Jim Tierney, the detective, will give the readers many exciting hours in the months to come.

William Heyler, whose true-to-life, gripping vocational stories have won him wide acclaim from parents and librarians, as well as the hearty approval of boys, is working on new stories. Stag coaches are interviewing famous writers and athletes and world-renowned explorers, to bring boys the color and fun of sports and travel.

In short, THE AMERICAN BOY, under its new price, will continue to give boys a magazine that measures up to the best standards set by adult magazines. Send your subscription to THE AMERICAN BOY, 7430 Second Blvd., Detroit, Michigan. Enclose your name and address and the proper amount of money, and THE AMERICAN BOY will soon be headed your way, loaded with reading thrills.
