Urges Commercial Poultry Farming Here Prohibited

According to the suggestion, the plan was laid aside for consideration at a latter meeting.

Objections to poultry farming were first voiced at a meeting of the board in April when L. N. Morse, 610 Division street, applied for a permit to construct a poultry addition.

The permit was granted on the grounds that Mr. Morse already had more poultry than the village limit of 100.

Mr. Morse later applied for a permit to construct two car garages. It was believed that he intended to use his old garage as an additional poultry house, so the second application was denied.

African Bird Directs People to Bees' Nests

One of the most remarkable birds is the African honeyguide, which directs human beings to bees' nests, in the expectation that it will be rewarded by a meal of the bees' wax when the nest is opened, relates a correspondent in the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

What especially excites the bird is the appearance of a honey-bag, or, rather, instinct teaches the birds to associate this beast with the discovery of bees' nests, the honey of which it delights to eat.

The birds know that by following a honey-bag they are likely to come by a feast. And this may explain their behavior toward man—they expect him to be a honey-lover, too!

A story about the puzzle of the warning of bees is that hive-bees are descended from Indian bees which migrate when fowls die in the district and bloom in another, and that bees retain the age-old migratory instinct.

Cats Will Learn Tricks; Not as Willingly as Dogs

Cats when properly trained have almost as much capacity as dogs for learning amusing tricks. They can be taught to jump through the hands, to sit up and beg and so on, but they do not show anything like the willing co-operation of the dog, according to a writer in the Detroit News.

But the characteristics of no two animals are alike. Starting at the kitten stage, some can be taught through kindness and patience to do many things, from a dignified shaking of hands to a pure for good dinner. Many cats will learn these things gracefully and perform them nicely, but most, it must be admitted, have to be bribed.

Some say the cat is too smart to do tricks; it refuses to make a fool of itself to amuse its master and his friends. A dog will comply to gain his master's attention and approval; a cat only if anything tangible is the result.

Cats often act as alarm clocks. They arrive at the bedroom door at the stroke of eight with demands for breakfast. Mark Twain taught his cat, Bambino, to put out his clear lighter at a signal from him, and she would jump onto the table and extinguish the light with her paw.

Other bright cats will impatiently rattle the knob of the door when it is not opened quickly enough to let them in. Others grow proficient in opening doors for themselves.

Book 900 Years Old Believed to be at least 900 years old and of great value, a small volume was discovered during an exhibition of old manuscripts in the library of the Exeter cathedral, in England.

The book relates to Leofric, first bishop of Exeter (1001-1017), who presented to the cathedral the Exeter Book, an anthology of Anglo-Saxon poetry.

Nerves and the Hair Red-headed people are the least likely to become bald; blond people are the most likely. Men doing active physical work have less trouble with baldness than have men in sedentary occupations. Those with high nervous tension are prone to lose their hair.

Card of Thanks Please accept our grateful appreciation for your kindness and sympathy tendered us during our recent bereavement.
