Match for Great Sperma The Greenland whale, though huge, is timid and harmless, but the killer whale, much smaller, is one of the fiercest denizens of the ocean, and is the only species of cetacean which has a complete set of teeth in both jaws. Killers hunt in packs and are thus more than a match for the great cachalot or sperm whale, notes a writer in Titbits Magazine.

According to an Antarctic explorer, in attacking the killers leap high into the air by the whale's side. They then devour the tongue, which will frequently weigh as much as four tons, leaving their huge prey to die.

The explorer also asserted that he had seen a pack of eight to twelve killers come to the ice-edge and leap six feet out of the water, as if to discover whether any seals were basking on it. If there were they would dive underneath, smash up the ice, and collect their victims.

If they were of commercial value killers would soon be greatly reduced in numbers, but, unfortunately, they are comparatively worthless and thus enjoy almost complete immunity from attack by man.

Where Squirrels Live Squirrels, the common little rodent, is at home in almost any place, even in the orchard, where one squirrel can make more noise than two boys. But the large gray squirrel is a shy and timid creature of the forest, and the woodchuck, where there is plenty of sugar maple, in favoring localities where they will congregate in considerable numbers, living amicably together.
