The trend is still toward reversion of the new deal to make work. The president is a bit alarmed over the growth of radical sentiment and does not want to be caught between fires of the right and left. His worry over what kind of republicans and what kind of democrats will be elected in November is increasing. Mr. Roosevelt is making a distinct bid for conservative support. His daily conferences with business leaders indicate that he wants them to go along with him and help combat radical and irresponsible tendencies. The disposition of most business men is to go along though they cannot easily conceal their resentment over the way the administration itself has encouraged the "wild men" and out of congress who are politically ambitious.

Is sentiment in favor of the new deal throughout the nation on the wane? A check by the House Diggers in their nationwide "check-up" poll of 65,000 ballots to determine the popularity of the Roosevelt efforts, revealed, last week that 47 states now oppose the president's acts and policies with enough votes registered to make a majority. Voters of these "straw" ballots in 43 states have indicated by their votes that 17 states now oppose the president's acts and policies with enough votes registered to make a majority. Please answer me this—
 Wherefore do gentlemen prefer blondes?
 Why do men in public conveyances give up their seats to the ladies?
 Should a girl of 20 under any circumstances wed a man of 60?
 What had started the practice of blockading the door with hand gills?
 Why are so many sparkling songs sung so sad?
 Why do roosters crow at night?
 Why are better drivers, men or women?
 How can people sitting back of you at the cinema, having seen the picture, enjoy your joy of anticipation by whispered tidings of what is about to take place?
 What's the idea of fumes handicapping themselves by hobbling their feeties and blindingfold half their eyesies?
 Did the inventor of revolving doors bear in mind that a certain percentage of the masculine persuasion has spacious pedal pedalers?
 Are women more deceitful than men?
 Are men more conceited than women?
 Why is it a chain of red lights halt you when you're in haste.

Broncho
 Clarkmen Defeat Bensenville by Score of 18 to 0
 Three Touchdowns in Second Half Account for Local's Total
 The Bronchos bucked through to their second conference victory when they trampled over Bensenville by a score of 18 to 0 in a game which was due mainly to a passing offense, brought back by the starting line up to 500 paces with two victories and 19 points.
 The contest was fairly even during the first half. Bensenville was handicapped by many penalties for offside, and the Bronchos did not attack. Neither team played any exceptional brand of football during the first half. However, in the last few minutes of the first half the Bronchos put on a passing drive that was stopped only by the timer's run on the one foot marker. Had the penalty not ended at that moment, the Bronchos would certainly have put across a touchdown.
 The first few minutes of the second half came, returning a punt not away for a spectacular run over the goal line, with the aid of some pretty blocking. However, the referee called one of the blocks clipping, and the run went for nothing.
 A few minutes later Wallace in a scrum in Bensenville pass, and with a clear field, it was only a matter of running about 40 yards to make a touchdown. The try for the extra point failed.
 In the fourth quarter the Bronchos put across two more touchdowns. The first came when Chamberlain started end down the middle to score. Wallace made his second touchdown of the day by scoring after catching a short pass. Both tries for extra points failed on these two touchdowns.
 The game was a nice game for the locals, making most of the Bronchos' plays. Osborn and Decker were also doing some nice work in the backfield for Bensenville.
 The week the Bronchos will go on against some tough competition when they meet the Libertyville Wildcats at Northridge park Saturday. Last Friday the Wildcats suffered their first conference defeat for five years, at Bensenville, when the Arlington Cardinals 19 to 7. The powerful Libertyville team will be out for revenge for this defeat, which will make it a hard game for the Bronchos.
 The starting lineup for Friday's game was as follows:
 Substitutions for Bensenville: Bensenville, 10 into the line; Bensenville, Fletcher, B. Keaton, Waller, Kinnaman, F. Mountain, Naff, Mendenhall, Graboske, Hager, Soss, Landwehr and F. Wood.

UNNECESSARY WOUND
 A rusty nail prodded into flesh causes at least temporary infection. A muckraking article such as that which appeared in Caslow's Weekly of October 13 attacking a man and institution and then circulated in the victim's home town leaves a certain amount of community infection.

Whereas local citizens have attempted to cauterize the wound by talking it down, a certain amount of subsequent discussion is inevitable. For one thing the Lions club had decided to hear Caslow's plan for issue of commercial scrip and arrangements had been made to hold a meeting in the village hall where the plan would be presented and if possible sold to the merchants. These steps had been taken before the malicious propaganda article was circulated. Steps to withdraw use of the village hall and to cancel the meeting naturally resulted in holding open the discussion.

Next to the personal attack on the president of Jewel Tea Co., the most malicious part of the article was that which attempted to line up local merchants against Jewel Tea Co. We have been unable to find even a little justification for this. One merchant who was directly quoted or misquoted in the article, reported the next day after its distribution that he had nothing whatever to do with it.
 Muckraking is bad enough when it is based on facts. It is worse when tangled up with malicious fancy.

"I wish I could have ordered a set of those beautiful books yesterday," sighed Mrs. Manley. "But I regret now that I don't afford them, they wouldn't do much good. I'd have to hide them or they'd be torn to pieces before I could read them. It would really to enjoy them. Yet she is starting to school next fall and I am anxious for her to begin like the right book. Tell me, Mrs. Allen—your children are all so smart in school and have such good taste in their reading—when did you begin to cultivate it?"

Her neighbor laughed. "When Virginia was about seven months old.
 "Seven months?" gasped Mrs. Manley.
 Mrs. Allen nodded. "She was sitting in my lap one day and made a sudden grab for the magazine I was reading. I had my tiny fists help me pat the crumpled page smooth again and then together we put the magazine away. Next time I was holding a book that she got curious about and it received the same treatment. 'Mother's book! Nice book!' I explained. It wasn't long before she understood that the handling of books and magazines was a privilege—and a joy, for soon she was old enough to hold the gay pictures of advertisements and covers."
 "Didn't she ever deliberately tear a magazine?"
 "Not after I gave her a pile of old newspapers of her very own for her play corner. Much of the attraction of paper is for the delightful crackling sound it makes—and the sense of achievement that comes from finding oneself in the center of a heap of torn bits."
 "But what has that to do with good reading?" puzzled Mrs. Manley.
 "It's a beginning. Virginia soon understood it was only old newspapers she could crush and tear, and, later, only old magazines she could cut from. Her respect for the printed page is a start toward the enjoyment of literature; and then by her first birthday Virginia had been given picture books of her own with her first books came her first book shelf. See?" She pointed to the lowest of the tier of well-used books. "That's 'My Bobby' and 'First It Was Virginia,' then 'Salby's,' and Dorothy's."
 "And I suppose they've been taught to keep their books there?"
 Mrs. Manley stretched her neck. "Well, they've learned if that's where they put them, that's where they'll find them the next time they're wanted," answered Mrs. Allen, smiling.

The biggest business in America is the administration of relief to the needy. In the land which prides itself on its independence and the independence of its citizens more people are living on the charity of some form of government—federal, state, and local—than live on the revenue from professional service, from transportation, or from clerical occupations. More than 17,000,000 persons who are on relief at the acceptance of government money has become a fact of life. This winter 3,000,000 more are expected to join them. Even with this huge number on the relief rolls there are still additional millions who would be forced to ask for help, were it not for their savings or the gratuity of their relatives.

New 1934 Tuberculosis Christmas Seals Show First Sanitarium in U. S.
 To commemorate the origin 35 years ago of tuberculous sanitarium movement in the United States, the 1934 Christmas seals will bear a reproduction of that first one-room building which was the "first hospital" for consumptives in this country, the Illinois Tuberculosis Association announced today.
 Against a background of green and blue is set the little postcard which housed the first two tuberculous patients to leave the famous rest of the mountain side and pine trees shown in the miniature scene. It also bears the red double-barbed cross, the international emblem of the fight against tuberculosis.
 In every state in the union, as well as in territorial possessions of the United States, and many foreign countries, tuberculous Christmas seals will be sold to finance the all-year campaign against the scourge. During the past quarter-century, the tuberculous death rate has been reduced more than 60 per cent.
 In addition to its historical significance, this year's seal has international significance as it emphasizes the part the sanitarium plays in the campaign against the disease, according to the association.
 The spread of the sanitarium movement is held by tuberculosis workers to be one of the most important steps in the control of the disease. In communities where sanatoria are located, control methods center about the tuberculosis hospital, as they produce an effective method for the isolation of open cases of the disease. Segregation of the sick from the well is the principal method of preventing tuberculosis. It was reported.
