HAVE WE TOO MUCH GOVERNMENT

Now that the election is over and the officials named for the ensuing term it might not be amiss to direct attention to the cost of our system of government.

According to recent census figures the taxpayers of the United States support 3062 county governments, 16,659 city governments, 128,548 school districts and 19,769 township organizations. The question before the citizens of this country is whether there are too many organizations for modern needs.

We have no objection to any of these arms of government if the taxpayers are willing to pay for them. However, the average citizen of this republic pays $71.09 each year to support them, when many of them could be eliminated without crippling government in the least.

TEACHERS WARN PUPILS

School teachers of Barrington occasionally take a few minutes out of their work to discuss with their pupils the dangers of the highway, with modern automobiles whizzing by and children being accidentally killed at the rate of eighty a week throughout the country.

Not only should this slaughter have the attention of school teachers but other organizations in the community should help in the fight against this terrible toll. Children must be repeatedly warned to avoid the dangers that lurk in careless use of the highways of the nation.

It's time for us to quit taking for granted the death of eighty children a week and almost that many adults every day. The price is too much to pay for speed and concerted effort can cut down the death toll appreciably.

BETTER SAILING AHEAD

The election is a milestone. It is better behind us than ahead of us. Business will find itself in another fortnight and, coupled with assurances that may be expected on the fiscal situation from the president himself, there will be a disposition to take a chance on enlarged programs of production for 1935.—David Lawrence.

HOME EDUCATION

The Do-As-You-Please Room

"Mother, Helen won't play with me!" complained Mary Joyce to her mother. "She wants to see all the time!"

"Don't be odd, Helen," reproved Mrs. Joyce, "and play with the others." Helen gathered up her sewing and went to join a game in which she was not really needed and at the moment was not at all interested.

Many mothers make this effort to "standardize" their children's play, forgetting that the individuality, the tastes, the physical condition and the inclinations of each child should have consideration. If the quiet little girl is to finish a doll's dress while the other children romp on the lawn with the pet dog, it is hardly fair to make her put down her fascinating task just because the majority prefer another occupation.

The do-as-you-please room is a saving institution which will be used on occasions, not only by the less active child, but by each member of the family. It is not being queer or contrary that prompts a boy to want to finish a kite rather than to go fishing at a particular moment, and the little girl who happily sees on a toy doll's garment is not bound to "grow up to be a maiden lady" on that occasion. Concentration on an interesting activity, indulgence, or some childish sorrow are good reasons for wanting to be alone. At this rate, having a spot where one can be secure from the noise and confusion is a privilege which grows up as sympathies. The do-as-you-please room may be only a corner of the living-room or the study space, but the apple tree, but wherever it is should be considered sacred from invasion. When children know that they are regarded as individuals just as definitely as they are regarded as members of a group, they are much better tempered, more likely to do well in school and also more original in thought and purpose. Often the stronger child dominates the weaker, or the selfish one pouts until he gets his way, but in the quiet corner, the retreat, the little world all his own.

An elderly woman of my acquaintance, often says "that one of the happiest privileges of her childhood was also that of her brothers and sisters was the opportunity, always open, to slip into the old-fashioned parlor and there "think their thoughts" or sew or read or do whatever they wished to do, undisturbed. Not every day not every week did the doctor for solitude come, but when a child wanted to be apart from the group no comment was made. It being generally recognized that everybody at times prefers to be alone.

"Phase warfare," it is the accepted reason in a happy household when the child "does not want to go with the rest or take part in the same game. It is quiet and politely given and accepted, and that is the end of the matter.

WHAT'S GOING ON IN WASHINGTON

The 74th congress, chosen November 8, already has made political history. But that is not all. Not since the Civil war, and so far as records disclose, not since two party government became fully established in this country, has a party in power lost an election year when no president was chosen. Yet that now has happened. When the new congress meets January 3, 221 Democrats will take their seats in the house. This congress will 103 who sat in the last congress. There will be 104 republicans, instead of 113 who sat last session.

The bureau of agricultural economics report that higher food prices all along the line may be expected until next year's crop begins to come on the market. For one week the government officials conferred with agricultural economists of 40 states and with field chiefs of the agricultural administration. The result: farm production lower than the unusually high production of 1935 is expected next year. All higher prices this year may tend to vitiate excessive planting of some crops in 1936, particularly where adjustments are not in effect. Continued improvement in demand late in the year will depend primarily upon recovery in the durable goods industries where the decline in employment and production has been most pronounced. Frauds there will be in quality, but to the family that relies upon a good old-fashioned roast or steak—the food price barometer does not augur well. Market guides are having to revise their retail meat prices from day to day—and the trend is always upward. From the government, the housewife is told that "a substantial advance in prices of all meat animals is expected. Added to that "the general quality and health of these animals to be slaughtered" will be much below average."

Conservative forces will find their principal support in the ranks of democrats from the old south. Democratic political ideas range from those of Huey Long of Louisiana and Theodore Bilbo of Mississippi to those of Carter Glass and Harry Ford of Virginia and Edward Smith of South Carolina. Political ideas in the republican party will range from those of Senator Norris of Nebraska to Senator Hastings of Delaware.

The commander of the American Legion was among the callers on Friday. Commander Frank C. Belgrand reported when he left the white house that he had not discussed anything controversial with the president, but before he had finished his interview with the men who gathered about him he shattered a hope raised by General Hines, head of the veterans' administration, who had indicated the hope that the ex-service men would not ask for a cash bonus. Commander Belgrand drew himself up and announced in no uncertain terms that the bonus was one of the many "mandates" that the convention had given him.

No sudden prosperity wave is in sight for next year as far as one important group of government economists can see. They look instead for a year of trade activity, both on the farm and in the cities, comparable to the first half of 1934. If any great improvement above that level should occur, it would be due to government stimulus. Those are the studied conclusions of the economists who have prepared the annual report of the bureau of agricultural economics on the national outlook for the coming year. All factors are weighed and the many sources of government information are tapped in arriving at conclusions that are not only so much attention is being devoted to speeding up the industrial machine, the present report assumes a special interest.

Much has been heard of the depression troubles of the small business man. The NRA badge was accused of injuring him. Congress sought to open federal credit resources for his benefit. President Roosevelt frequently considered his needs. Now a study has been completed, revealing the facts in the case. This study shows that just about every thing said of the troubles of the small business man is true. He apparently is being discriminated against by banks. His place in the country's economic structure is threatened. The direct lending program of the RFC and the federal reserve banks is a failure. Manufacturers with orders to fill are unable to obtain raw materials. Little that has been said of the small business man's difficulties is exaggerated.

Air pictures of farm lands are being taken by the agricultural adjustment administration to see that farmers live up to their agreement to reduce acreage. This method of checking farms counts about a third of the acreage, and a wheel method of measuring fields. It has been used in wheat areas and may be extended to corn, cotton, and tobacco sections.
