

Cary Family Returns After Three Weeks' Motor Trip Vacation

CARY.—Mr. and Mrs. Frank Jelonek and family returned home Saturday from a motor trip spent in touring the south and southwest for three weeks. They left Cary to attend the anniversary convention as guests of the Blue Moon Produce company at Cape Girardeau, Mo., and from there drove to Memphis, Tenn., for an eight-day stay.

Little Rock, Ark., was the next stopping place, where they visited relatives for three days. Continuing on to Tulsa, Okla., they stopped at various scenic spots in the Ozark mountains.

They returned to Springfield, Mo., after visiting relatives in several parts of Oklahoma, and then back into Illinois.

An Honorable Profession

- Yes . . . forgery can be an honorable profession. In the larger cities one can find several persons skilled in the art of writing another man's name with such astonishing accuracy that the man himself would honor the signature as genuine.
- Important persons must frequently send out hundreds and thousands of letters . . . skillfully executed form letters that must carry the touch of individuality. Consequently, they must be signed, for no rubber stamp, no careless scrawl of a subordinate will answer. Is Mr. and Mrs. Important Individual going to spend hours or even days executing these signatures? Not by any means. They will turn the job over to an expert who will oblige with perfect reproductions at the rate of five or six hundred an hour . . . all identical, all convincing.
- In the field of furniture we also have our legitimate forgeries. "Charles o' London" living room suites . . . copies of a style popular in England. "Early American" in bedroom suites, following closely the quaint beauty of the original style of that period. "Duncan Phyfe" in dining rooms . . . a faithful copy of the original designer's work. These and scores of other furniture forgeries are legitimate. They dress our homes, delight the eye and give American dwellings the charm that makes them famous 'round the world. Indeed, it is our pleasure to supply just such merchandise at the lowest prices consistent with high quality.
