Fox River Grove Man Found Guilty of Assault Charge

Struck Dubsky With Automobile Crank, McHenry Jury Finds

John Narowitz, Jr. of Fox River Grove was found guilty of assault with a deadly weapon by a jury in McHenry county court Monday afternoon after an hour's deliberation.

The case resulted from a fight at Heidelberg tavern in Fox River on June 25 when Edward Dubsky was allegedly struck over the head by an automobile crank in the hands of Narowitz.

Bud Parker, night chef at the Heidelberg and eye witness to the slugging, testified on the witness stand Monday that Dubsky had entered the tavern with two companions and had ordered coffee on the premises. The alleged attack on Dubsky entered a short time later with his wife left and returned with the automobile crank. He immediately went to the table at which Dubsky was seated, he added, and "You will threaten my father." He struck Dubsky on the back of the head and then again on the forehead.

Parker asserted he interfered at that time and took Dubsky to a doctor. Dubsky was first held by Henry Nulle, McHenry county sheriff, but was released later and Narowitz taken in custody. He was granted his freedom under $2500 bond.

Narowitz testified on the stand that a friend had told him that Dubsky threatened his father over an imaginary grudge. His father was employed at the Elgin State hospital while Dubsky was confined there as a voluntary patient.

State's Attorney William M. Carroll represented the state in the matter and Attorney J. J. McCauley was appointed by the court to represent Narowitz.
